The American Shrew and the U.S.

From Chinese, 1902.

[Short story]
It was a cool, quiet evening after a hot day. The new moon was in

The sky was clear, and the stars shone brightly. The air was fresh and invigorating. The sound of crickets could be heard in the distance. A gentle breeze rustled the leaves of the trees. It was a perfect evening for a stroll.

As I walked along the path, I noticed a Chinese woman sitting quietly on a bench. She looked lost in thought. Her eyes were fixed on the distant horizon. I approached her and asked if she needed any assistance. She thanked me and continued to gaze into the distance.

I wondered what was on her mind. Was she missing someone? Or was she lost in the beauty of the night? I decided to sit down and keep her company. We started a conversation about the beauty of the night and the wonders of nature.

It was a peaceful evening spent in the company of a kind stranger. The night was young, and the world was full of possibilities. I felt a sense of contentment and fulfillment knowing that I had made a positive impact on someone's life.

The Chinese woman thanked me for my company and wished me a good night. I bid her farewell and continued on my walk, feeling a sense of warmth and connection with the world around me.
