Visiting Assistant Professor of Linguistics

The Department of Linguistics at Swarthmore College invites applications for a one-year, Visiting Assistant Professor position in theoretical linguistics beginning in Fall 2015 for the 2015-2016 academic year. The teaching load is five courses over the academic year. Teaching experience is essential, as is the ability to teach several of the following: Introduction to Linguistics, Syntax, Phonology, Semantics, Morphology, Field Methods / Language Documentation, and an advanced seminar in the candidate’s area of expertise. The Linguistics Department is a collaborative Tri-College curricular program involving faculty and students from Bryn Mawr, Swarthmore and Haverford Colleges.

Please submit (1) a letter of application, (2) a curriculum vitae, (3) a one-page statement of courses you would like to teach, (4) three letters of recommendation, and (5) two articles or chapters you have written. All materials must be submitted electronically, through Academic Jobs Online by February 2, 2015. We will require applicants to have the PhD in hand before the beginning of the term of appointment.
