Ted Abel
I am the director of the Iowa Neuroscience Institute and the Roy J. Carver Chair in Neuroscience at the University of Iowa. Until 2017, I was the Brush Family Professor of Biology and co-director of the Biological Basis of Behavior Program at the University of Pennsylvania. My research focuses on the molecular mechanisms of memory storage and the molecular basis of neurodevelopmental and psychiatric disorders. After graduating from Swarthmore in 1985, I was a Marshall Scholar at the University of Cambridge and an NSF Fellow at Harvard University. At Swarthmore, I was actively involved in research in biology and chemistry, and I served as a resident advisor. I have returned to Swarthmore several times as an Honors examiner. Outside of the classroom and the lab, I sing (an interest begun at Swarthmore under Peter Gram Swing), play the clarinet, and enjoy opera and baseball.

Charles Bailey
While a rising senior, I put the Swarthmore pennant on the summit of Mt. Denali in Alaska. I taught agriculture to middle school students in a remote village of eastern Nepal. I worked for the Ford Foundation as a grant maker in seven African and five Asian countries. I received the Vietnam Friendship Medal from the President of Vietnam. I live in Lummi Island, WA.

Joseph Becker
After 36 years in Merion Station, PA—a near-in Philadelphia suburb—I moved to Center City Philadelphia in 2014. We loved the neighborhood and the house; stayed there too long as empty nesters; love living/ walking in Center City and have never looked back. After a 15+ year career as a radiologist in university or academic community hospitals, I am now a consulting radiologist at the National Board of Medical Examiners where I create testing examinations for med students, interns, a number of medical specialty boards, and other healthcare professionals. Hobbies includes: reading (mainly nonfiction); taking courses (Lifelong Learning at Swarthmore; Temple; online); spoiling grandchildren; theater and concerts (Philadelphia Orchestra as well as free student recitals at nearby Curtis Institute). During the academic year, I offer externships for Swarthmore students at Cooper University Hospital in Camden; the U.S. House of Representatives; and the Foreign Policy Research Institute in Philadelphia. One special focus of our philanthropic interest is the Read by 4th initiative in Philadelphia, the goal of which is enabling all public school children to read at grade-level by the end of third grade.

Lizabeth Burrell
Having spent the first 65 years of my life in New York City, I now live in the (northern branch) Green Mountain National Forest overlooking Mount Abraham. Though I have retired from the practice of admiralty and maritime law, I continue to be active in international maritime organizations and as an author and arbitrator. I greatly enjoy walking in the woods with my young golden retriever and getting a chance to try cooking Alton Brown and Bobby Flay recipes.
Way-Ting Chan
[Image]
I am a co-founder of Blue Garnet, a social impact consulting firm based in Southern California, as well as a founding partner and recent co-chair of the board for Social Venture Partners Los Angeles. I am driven by a head for problem solving and a heart for ending poverty and inequality. I am closing in on 20 years of strategy and management consulting with philanthropies, nonprofits, and corporations, tackling issues related to outcomes, impact, and performance. I sit on the advisory boards of organizations for which I have a deep passion. As adjunct faculty, I co-taught “Impact Thinking, Measurement, and Evaluation” at Pepperdine University’s Masters program in Social Entrepreneurship and Change. I hold an International MBA from the University of Chicago Booth School of Business and a BA with honors in economics and political science from Swarthmore. When not out trying to make the world a better place, I delight in spending time with my family and feeding my curiosity, often at the same time.

Geoff Cline
[Image]
I live in Lincoln, Nebraska with my wife, Kristen Lockwood Cline ’96, and three children. For the past seven years, I’ve been the managing partner of Orange Street Partners. Prior to that, Kristen and I owned an art gallery in Santa Fe, NM, focused on 20th century American art. We continue to be active in the arts and enjoy travel and cooking.

Robert Cushman
[Image]
I live in Oak Ridge, Tennessee (near the Smokies). I retired from Oak Ridge National Laboratory, where I worked as an ecologist. Retirement has given my wife and me the time to travel to several interesting places around the world. I play bluegrass banjo at various venues (Museum of Appalachia, area restaurants and brewpubs, weddings and other special events). I have volunteered for the College for several decades—attending college fairs and interviewing applicants.

Twan Claiborne
[Image]
I currently live in Harlem, New York, my home of seven years now. I am a learning specialist at an inclusion K-12 school in the Upper West Side. I have been in the field of education in various capacities over the past seven years. My specialty is literacy in reading and math. Outside of work, I am involved in various sports leagues and community organizations, including the NYGFL (New York Gay Football League) and NYCORE (New York Collective of Radical Education). Additionally I am involved in New York LGBTQQA nightlife as the drag queen Kenya Keepup, performing in venues across the four boroughs of New York City and northern New Jersey.

Shivani Chinnappan
[Image]
I’m a recent grad who will be moving to Boston to pursue biomedical research at The Broad Institute. I hope to pursue a career in women’s health and to return to my hometown of Philadelphia to do advocacy work for at-risk mothers. My hobbies include reading, weightlifting, cooking, and crossword puzzles.

Charles Christopher "Kip" Davis
[Image]
I live in New York City and work in market research. I have worked for over 25 years in syndicated media and media ownership analysis, which has provided me with a plethora of contacts and insights into the lives of affluent Americans. I have two grown children, and after my involvement in their schools growing up, have served on the board of an educational nonprofit focused on helping schools for underserved students in public schools. For many years I was involved in theatre as an actor, writer, and director. I collaborated with my brother, Thulani Davis, and my cousin, Thoshu Davis, on the opera “X, The Life and Times of Malcolm X,” which was produced at New York City Opera in 1986. A new production is scheduled for 2020.

Patrina Dawson
[Image]
I am an attorney and work as senior cross-border specialist for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in Washington, D.C. Prior to this, I worked for 15 years as general counsel of Standard & Poor’s Ratings in New York. I live in Lovettsville, Virginia on a small farm near the Blue Ridge mountains with my husband, Dave, three horses, and three dogs. I have three grown children and two grandchildren. I enjoy baking and various needle crafts. My family emigrated from Romania in 1969 right before I turned 14 years old.

Michael Dennis
[Image]
After graduating from Swarthmore in 1993 with a major in history, I received a Masters in Business Administration (MBA) from the Haas School of Business, U.C. Berkeley in 1999. I live in Portland, Oregon and work there and in Washington, D.C. as a senior advisor in U.S. Government Relations for The Nature Conservancy, a global conservation organization. Interests include running and competitive squash, travel (favorites: Yemen, Oregon High Desert, Myanmar, and Thailand, where I worked as an economic consultant for two years), and bike-pedestrian advocacy.

Janet Erick
[Image]
As the Executive Artistic Director of Florida Children’s Theatre, a nonprofit arts education center in Fort Lauderdale, I oversee both the artistic and administrative components of the organization. Our mission is to teach the art of life through the magic of theatre. We serve South Florida and beyond through classes, productions, and community outreach programs. My family is a patchwork together, wonderful mix of stepsons, adopted sons, and other children and young adults who call our house home, along with two rescue mutts.

Sampirti Ganguli
[Image]
I live in Arlington, Virginia and run a small consulting firm that helps philanthropic donors achieve the greatest good with their resources.

Emily Gottlieb
[Image]
I served as deputy director for Law & Policy at the Center for Justice & Democracy, a nonprofit consumer organization dedicated to protecting the U.S. civil justice system. Swarthmore inspired and prepared me for this career path of public policy engagement. A native New Yorker, I returned to the city after college and currently live there with my husband and two children. For many years, I’ve been actively involved with my high school as an Alumni Council member, class officer, task force chair and now member of the Board of Trustees – volunteer opportunities I truly value since they allow me to stay connected and give back to my school community. I also enjoy travel (six continents down, one to go!), yoga, the NYT crossword puzzle, baking and movies, and more recently, freelancing for a comic book series.

Julian Harper
[Image]
I am based in London following ten years in NYC. I work for an investment fund and focus on global equity investments, primarily in Europe and Asia.

Natalie Flores
[Image]
I was a psychology and art history major at Swarthmore and now work for ChargePoint, a tech company in Philadelphia. I grew up in Arizona and have a deep love of bar trivia, costume makeup, and Halloween. As a recent grad, I look forward to engaging with current students in order to provide advising and guidance through academic and personal life at Swarthmore, in addition to helping women, students of color, and low income students navigate the job search process.
Emily Anne Nolte Jacobstein
 I have a BA in biology and an MBA from Georgetown Business School at Emory University. I am a management consultant with PwC focused on non-profit hospital revenue cycle. In addition to Alumni Council, I enjoy volunteering with the Junior League of Boston, Forte Foundation, the Massachusetts-Rhode Island chapter of Healthcare Finance Management Association, and AICJ New England. I am a former board member of the Cancer Support Community of Atlanta. My husband, Jeffrey, and I live in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Peter Jaquette
 After 25 years of moving from coast to coast for my career, we have settled in the North San Diego County area, though we spend our summers on an island in the Penobscot Bay of Maine. I’m still working part-time as a business economist, which has been my career for the past 40 years. I still play classic rock with the Narwhals, a nonprofit biotech subsidiary of the Gates Foundation that was launched in 2010 to develop drugs and vaccines for tuberculosis, malaria, diarrheal disease and major causes of infant mortality. After Swarthmore, I trained as an infectious disease physician and HIV immunologist, and have worked in a variety of academic, nonprofit and pharmaceutical settings. I serve on the Board of Directors for the Society for the Immunotherapy of Cancer and lead their global access initiative, and was previously a director of Action Wellness, a Philadelphia social services nonprofit. I live in Brookline, Massachusetts with Nicole Kahn ’94 and our two children. We are lucky that our kids share our love of the outdoors, and we spend much of our free time and vacations hiking, backpacking, and otherwise getting off the grid.

Ayanna Johnson
 I am a public health advisor at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, focusing on strengthening partnerships to improve population health and eliminate health disparities. I am also leading efforts for the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Health to develop regional action plans and host regional meetings on healthy aging policy and practice, across the country. Previously, I served as a health policy fellow within the Office of the U.S. Surgeon General, advising the director of science and policy. Outside of work, you can find me in the nation’s capital spending time with friends and family, exploring the city, enjoying a comedy show or traveling. I am on the leadership team for the Lean In – DC Network, where I work to provide professional development opportunities for women in DC to become successful leaders. I have a Master of Science in public health from the Johns Hopkins University Bloomberg School of Public Health.

David Kaufman
 I am the chief medical officer of the Bill & Melinda Gates Medical Research Institute, a nonprofit biotech subsidiary of the Gates Foundation who was launched in 2010 to develop drugs and vaccines for tuberculosis, malaria, diarrheal disease and major causes of infant mortality. After Swarthmore, I trained as an infectious disease physician and HIV immunologist, and have worked in a variety of academic, nonprofit and pharmaceutical settings. I serve on the Board of Directors for the Society for the Immunotherapy of Cancer and lead their global access initiative, and was previously a director of Action Wellness, a Philadelphia social services nonprofit. I live in Brookline, Massachusetts with Nicole Kahn ’94 and our two children. We are lucky that our kids share our love of the outdoors, and we spend much of our free time and vacations hiking, backpacking, and otherwise getting off the grid.

Christine Kim
 I graduated from Swarthmore with a BA in political science as part of the Class of 2017. Having been very involved in student life, I served as student body president, director of Social Affairs Committee, and as one of the pioneers of the Diversity Peer Advisors program. While I was figuring out my career path, I also started a nonprofit, Bedfont Street, an organization that focuses on creating the premier small liberal arts college business network for women interested in corporate careers by supporting them during the undergraduate recruiting process and familiarizing them with concepts related to their respective fields. I am currently the chairwoman and CEO of the nonprofit, and there are four college chapters established thus far.

After graduating, I worked for Bank of America Merrill Lynch in their Leveraged Finance Origination group based in New York City before transitioning into my current real estate career with Related Companies on the renowned Hudson Yards Development in New York City. I hope to engage with current students on the topic of career development during my time as part of the Alumni Council.

Laura Markowitz
 I live in Tucson, where I work as a writer and editor, and as a contributing producer for Arizona Public Media. Early in my career as a journalist I trained as a family systems therapist, so most of my reporting focuses on stories about systems change and social justice. I’m currently co-authoring a book about analyzing economics problems from multiple perspectives. For fun, I write and produce original radio dramas, volunteer as a mentor, hike around the Southwest, and make pottery. My wife and I just celebrated our 30th anniversary.

Laura McKee
 Chicago has been home for me since graduating with the exception of a brief stint working in Germany and two years in the Peace Corps in Central African Republic. My career has been largely in strategy and business operations, culminating in the launch of Autism Home Support Services, a threemarket applied behavior analysis company that was sold in September 2017. I am currently consulting to entrepreneurial companies while I look for my next venture. My husband Tom and I have a charming cat, are very active in our UU church, and enjoy golfing, playing Scrabble, and travel. I am on the Board of The Admiral at the Lake, the CBGB where my parents live, and have volunteered with Indivisible. I love to sing with the Chicago Community Chorus.

Maria Paula Mello
 I am an assistant professor of special education at St. John’s University in New York City. In this role, I train future special educators and conduct research to improve the quality of life for young adults with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDD). My research focuses on the availability and development of post-secondary opportunities for young adults with IDD, specifically in the areas of college immersion, independent living, accessible housing, and meaningful employment.

Anne Richards
 I was a biology major at Swarthmore and went from there to get my veterinary degree at Cornell. I practice general medicine, surgery, and dentistry in two feline-only practices in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, which is much quieter and cleaner than a multi-species practice! I’m married to Chris Rodger ’98, and we currently have five cats at home. We are avid followers of Cornell hockey and college hockey in general, and I also play hockey year-round. I also enjoy gardening, lifting as much weight as possible, and disappearing into the backcountry of Ontario for a week on our annual canoe-camping trip.

Jim Sailer
 For the past 35 years, I have worked at the Population Council, an international nonprofit research organization dedicated to improving reproductive health, education, and development opportunities for women, men, and especially adolescent girls. I now lead the Council’s Center for Biomedical Research, which develops, tests, and secures regulatory approval for novel contraceptives like Norplant, Mirena, and Annovera. My work has taken me to Europe, Chile, Mexico, Egypt, Kenya, South Africa, and India. I live in Brooklyn near Prospect Park with my wife, teenage son, and oversized dog, and many of my best friends come from my days at Swarthmore. Notable personal achievement: I won Carl Kaess’s voice on my answering machine as a successful contestant on “Wait, Wait, Don’t Tell Me.”
I served for 12 years as director of the School of Music at the State University at SUNY-Fredonia from August 1993 after nine years at Wayne State University in Detroit. In fall 2003, I was appointed Interim Chair of the Department of Languages and Literature and served for that semester, while chairing a search for a permanent successor. I retired after the Fall 2005 semester. A lifelong musician, I have a career in music administration that spans almost 30 years and includes other appointments at Boston University, the New England Conservatory of Music, and the University of Minnesota. I am an accomplished bassoonist and woodwind coach and have performed at summer festivals such as the Berkshire Music Festival (Tanglewood), Marlboro, and Bowdoin, Chautauqua Institution from 1997 until 2002. I have held teaching positions at Columbia, Temple, Rutgers and Minnesota. I am an accomplished bassoonist and woodwind coach and have performed at summer festivals such as the Berkshire Music Festival (Tanglewood), Marlboro, and Bowdoin, Chautauqua Institution from 1997 until 2002. I have also served as executive director or president of several nonprofit organizations, and spent considerable time volunteering in my daughters’ schools (at one point teaching elementary school science, of all things). My most recent stint has been serving as chair of the Town Council, overseeing all aspects of running a small New England town. I am also currently serving on the boards of two nonprofit organizations. One is focused on preserving and promoting the history of Portsmouth, NH, and the other is focused on “helping our neighbors in need when they have nowhere else to turn.”

I served for 10 years as Peter Schoenbach

I have lived on the coast of New Hampshire for the past 10 years. I have two daughters who are 17 and 19 years old. Over the years I have served as executive director or president of several nonprofit organizations, and spent considerable time volunteering in my daughters’ schools (at one point teaching elementary school science, of all things). My most recent stint has been serving as chair of the Town Council, overseeing all aspects of running a small New England town. I am also currently serving on the boards of two nonprofit organizations. Steve Schwartz

I live in Cincinnati, Ohio, running my family’s 120-year-old business that sells equipment for first responders. I have two college-age children. I enjoy reading, podcasts, and playing tennis. I enjoy sponsoring a Swarthmore extern each year. I volunteer with an organization called My Way Helps that builds unique devices to enable disabled individuals to live with more dignity.

Riana Shah

I serve as an innovation strategy consultant for Fortune 500 companies and large nonprofit institutions. I am also the founder of Independent Thought & Social Action International (ITSA), an education reform venture that works with school districts to implement critical thinking and youth 3rd social entrepreneurship in curricula. ITSA has worked in over 30 cities across the country and has been featured in the Huffington Post, Women of Influence Magazine, and Google’s Generation: In Project. I enjoy hosting a podcast called Venture Vignettes, where I chat with trailblazers in entrepreneurship, innovation, and investment.

Kimberly St. Julian-Varnon

I am a Swattie from a rural town outside of Houston, Texas. I am a history professor at Lee College in Baytown, Texas. I teach American history, while my research focuses on Soviet history. I was a high school history teacher for four years and am dedicated to college access for poor and rural communities. I am also an avid Magic the Gathering player and bibliophile.

Jamie Steinh

I am a syndicated columnist, on national politics and history, for Creators Syndicate. A history major, I found that study relevant as a journalist in my work as a Baltimore Sun reporter for 10 years. My first job was as an assignment editor for CBS News in London. My columns and opinion essays have been widely published around the nation. I also hold a masters degree from the Kennedy School of Government. I am single and live in Washington, D.C.

Charlie Sussman

I graduated from Swarthmore in 2005, double majoring in engineering and economics. While at Swarthmore, I served on the Student Council. I was a four-year letter winner and a two-time captain of the Men’s Lacrosse team, earning Academic All-Conference as well as Honorable Mention All-Conference honors. Since graduating, I have worked in the financial services industry, starting at Lehman Brothers in New York, moving to Royal Bank of Canada in Calgary, and then landing at Bank of America back in New York, where I am currently a managing director as the head of oil derivatives trading. I am also chair of the Garnet Club Advancement Council. I reside in New City New York with my wife, Brooke, and two daughters, Wyatt and Gray. I am also on the board of Rebuilding Hope Street, a nonprofit that started at Swarthmore by fellow Alumni Council member Christine Kim ’17. In my free time, I enjoy running and skiing.

BoHoo Yoon

I live in Manhattan and work as an in-house corporate lawyer for a private equity firm. I love great food.

Dina Zingaro

I have been living and working in NYC in the field of journalism since graduating from Swarthmore in 2013. I began my career at CBS News in the research department of the Evening News before working as anchor Scott Pelley’s research assistant for three years. I currently work at CBS 60 Minutes as an associate producer where I work with a producer as a team to pitch and produce stories for air. A continuing passion for me is religion and as an extension of my studies and major in the religion department at Swarthmore, I have become a member of the religion reporter community and pitch religion stories as often as I can at CBS. In the city, I am a member of a book club of a few Swarties, and I spent the 2018-19 year as a Frank 5 Fellow for the College.

Nominate an Alum to Be Considered for Alumni Council

The Alumni Council nominating committee welcomes all suggestions for candidates. The committee considers many factors in selecting new members, including geographic location, graduation year, and a demonstrated, ongoing interest in the College through volunteer service, participation in College-sponsored activities, and a consistent record of giving. Volunteer participation in other organizations is also of interest to the nominating committee.

To nominate a person for consideration, please send the following information to Lisa Shafer at lshafer1@swarthmore.edu: Candidate’s name, class year, and why you feel this person would be a good addition to the Alumni Council. (Nominations for the 2020–21 academic year are due by October 1, 2019.)
